The Lovers. There was a candle maker man, And he was very old, For it was thirty years or more Since he began to mould.

His business on his face was wrote, As plain as though on paper; His long nose, running to a point, You sure would call a taper. And flamelike glowed his jolly tip,

For drinking hard, and stuffing Had made it red, and candle like, It brighter grew by snuffing. A daughter fair he had, but he Was wont to beat and starve her;

Said she, 'I'm sorry he's my pa, But wish that he was farther.' And Cupid in her tender heart An arrow dared to throw;

As that alone would be no use, But when her lover claimed her hand, The father did dispute: Said he, "Your ashes I would take, But I reject your suit."

He round the house would hover; And though he was no warrior, yet He was a nightly lover. 'My father's coming,' cried the maid; 'Oh! lover, woe betide you-

So when the shades of night were spread,

For he will cane you, I'm afraid; But come with me, I'll hide you.' So in the boiler he was crammed, His legs all cramped and bent; Cried he, "I have the copper got,

Though he has not the scent.' And there he passed the sleepless hours Of that eventful night: The time it passed so heavily.

He wished that it was light At early dawn, to light his fire The cross old fellow came :

Alas! for lover's constancy-He felt another flame. Oh! maiden, maiden, could you now Your lover's plight but see, Your pa, for lover's sake, would hate,

For pa-boiled he will be. Oh! now within that boiler hot, His every limb seemed frying; His situation, you will say, Indeed must have been trying Now from his seat he starts, and seared

Re-cover then your kettle. And speeding through the garden walks, The outer gate he won: Sure after such a melting down, I wonder he could run.

The Kingdom of Sardinia a Free State.

The kingdom of Sardinia, in Upper Italy, till within a few years hardly heard of, and possessing little more than 6,000,000 of inhabitants in its ten counties, is yet, by the confession of recent travelers from this country, one of the freest and most interesting nations of Europe. We have met with various testimonies to this effect, and here is one from Rev. Dr. Bacon, of New York. Says the doctor, in his speech there at the Hungarian meeting:

"I have said that there are but two countries where Kossuth could be safe and free. There is another country where he could find a sort of rest, but it is too near Austria to afford him an adequate asylum. I allude to the kingdom of Sardinia. It is a delightful refreshment to the traveler, when having landed at Trieste, and having traveled over Venetian Lombardy, he proses over a little stream, and finds himself suddenly in a free country. He sees that everything has a different aspect. The priests, with the look from the aspect they present in Austria! It is a refreshment to feel that the soldiers even are raised and trained not for the oppression of the people, but for their defence against Austria -There is a country that in the course of the year 1852 will probably be found taking the lead among the nations whose struggles will make the year 1852. a year of as great peril as that of 1848. There Kossuth will be safe. When revolution breaks out. Kossuth will be equally free in almost any part of

Yes, this beautiful country is environed by the towers of absolute powers, who hate her institutions, and will doubtless seek the first opportunity to precipitate their myrmidons, like wintry torrents, from the surrounding peaks, into the rich valleys of Piedmont, destroying and overwhelming everything in their career; and where they found liberty and plenty, leaving behind them despotism and a waste. It is curious to observe how striking the priests, with their great shovel hats, and black cloaks, appear, to travelers. Dr. Bacon is only one among a multitude who seem astonished at these dark clouds, skirting everywhere the Italian horizon .- Newark Duily Advertiser.

A Dangerous Adventure.

The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin in his letter of the 6th of November, tells the following story:

One of the most singular and dangerous adventures took place at Brussels a few days ago. Alphonse Thevelin. a gymnast, well known for his astonishing feats on the spring board, attached to Goddard's balloon, had advertised to give, at Brussels. one of his usual æronautical exhibitions. The people had gathered in immense crowds, on the town square, the spring board had been attached and all preparations made, and the balloon started majestically into the air, rising high above the houses.

Thevelin was about turning a somerset when he received a severe blow on the back. This was surprising, in the particular locality, but our gymnast did not hesitate to turn quickly and grapple with his name a chief, and if they all voted for him-by pla- wrial antagonist. Balloon, spring board, and all, went off and left him in mid-heaven, locked in a close embrace with St. Michael, not in propria personae. but in the form of an immense gilt statue, with which the Belgians have ornamented the tip-top of the steeple of their Hotel de Ville, or Town House.
